Sir Dominic Corrigan Papers

Collection
1795-[1940s]

Extent:

9 boxes and 5 rolled items

Creators:

Corrigan, Sir Dominic, 1802-1880

Martin, Lady Mary, d.1907

Description:

The professional papers of Sir Dominic Corrigan, covering his medical and political careers including his involvement in reforming medical legislation and the education system in Ireland. The collection also contains a small number of the personal papers of Sir Dominic Corrigan as well as members of his family, most notably his daughter Lady Mary Martin.

Arrangement:

The material has been divided into seven sections; Personal and Family Papers; Medical Career; Medical Legislation: Reform of education in Ireland; Other correspondence; Published works; and Caricature. Within each section further subdivisions have been made as necessary and material has been arranged chronologically.

Administrative History:

Dominic Corrigan was born 1 December 1802, the second son of John Corrigan, a dealer in agricultural tools, and his wife Celia O'Connor. He was educated at the lay college at Maynooth, and having shown an aptitude for medicine he was apprenticed to the local doctor, Edward Talbot O'Kelly. Corrigan took medical courses at various private schools and the two universities in Dublin between 1820 and 1825. He graduated from Edinburgh University in August 1825, with amongst other William Stokes. Corrigan returned to Dublin and began his private practice at 11 Ormond Quay. His private practice grew quickly and his success can be seen in the geographical movement of his practice, to 13 Bachelor's Walk in 1832 and in 1837 to 4 Merion Square West, the centre of the elite medical profession in Ireland.

As well as his lucrative private practice, during the 1860s he was making over £4000 a year, Corrigan took on a number of public appointments which allowed him to undertake and publish medical research. He was physician to Maynooth College, the Sick Poor Institute, the Charitable Infirmary Jervis Street, Cork Street Fever Hospital and the House of Industry Hospitals. Working with many of the city's poorest inhabitants he specialized in disease of the heart and lungs, and produced several important medical papers on the subject. He also lectured extensively to medical students.

Corrigan's career prospects were set back in 1846 when he joined the newly created Central Board of Health, which had been set up to try and cope with the consequences of the Irish famine. His support of the Board and especially his recommendations for the level of doctor's pay brought him into conflict with the leaders of the profession, who blocked his bid to become an honorary fellow of the King and Queen's College of Physicians in Ireland.

Despite this set back Corrigan was appointed physician-in-ordinary to Queen Victoria in Ireland in 1847, the first catholic to be so honoured, two years later Trinity College Dublin awarded him an honorary MD. In 1855 Corrigan out flanked the College of Physicians opposition by taking the licentiateship exam, with the newly qualified doctors. He became a Fellow of the College the following year, and in 1859 the first catholic president. It was during his tenure as President that the College acquired its present building. In 1866 he was awarded a baronetcy for his services to medicine.

Corrigan was an active member of the Royal Zoological Society of Dublin, presenting many papers to the society. In recognition of his involvement in the campaign to establish an Irish Pharmaceutical Society he was made its first President. Corrigan also served on the General Medical Council for over twenty years and was active in pushing for reform to medical education. He was also a strong campaigner for non-denominational education in Ireland. In 1859 he was appointed a commissioner of national education, he also served as a senator of the Queen's University of Ireland from the 1840s, and was vice-chancellor from 1871.

In 1870 Corrigan was elected a Liberal MP for Dublin city at a by-election. He advocated the early release of Fenian prisoners, and promoted secular education which brought him into conflict with the catholic hierarchy. He did not stand for re-election in 1874, one reason suggested for this is that his support of temperance and Sunday closing were unpopular with his electorate.

Corrigan married Joanna Woodlock, the daughter of a wealth merchant in 1829; they had three sons and three daughters. The eldest John, a soldier, died in 1866 leaving one son who succeeded his grandfather to the baronetcy. William became a lawyer and died unmarried in 1881. The third son Robert died an infant, two daughters Joanna and Celia both died unmarried, but the third Mary married Richard Martin, who later became deputy lieutenant of Dublin city.

Corrigan suffered a stroke in December 1879 and died on 1 February 1880, he was interred in the crypt of St. Andrew's Church, Westland Row.

Custodial History:

After Sir Dominic Corrigan's death his papers were preserved by his daughter Lady Mary Martin, who added notes to some items, as well as adding her own collection of papers relating to her father's life. After her death in 1907 the papers passed to her husbands family, and it was they who presented them to College. The original order of the material as created by Corrigan has been lost.

Campbell estate trust

Sub-Section
1837-1850

Extent:
4 files

Creator:
Corrigan, Sir Dominic, 1802-1880

Description:
In 1843 Dominic Corrigan was appointed as trustee to the Campbell estate trust. The trust had been established in 1837 by Peter Campbell of FitzWilliam Street, Dublin to provide for his wife Margaret Campbell and any children in event of his death.

Peter Campbell died in 1842 and one of the original trustees was unwilling to act and so was replaced by Corrigan. The estate was comprised of various accounts, shares and bonds, including two from Charles Gardiner, 1st Earl Blessington. In May 1849 Corrigan became desirous of resigning his position as trustee as he was concerned by 'circumstances which have lately occurred within my own immediate connections in relation to some trusts ... [and] the chance however remote of implicating myself or family', this was finally carried out in January of the following year.

Proposed Medical Charities Ireland Bill (1842)

Sub-section
1842-1843

Extent:

3 folders

Creator:

Corrigan, Sir Dominic, 1802-1880

Description:

Collection of papers relating to the proposed Medical Charities Bill (1842) which dealt with the provision of support for dispensaries and fever hospitals, the selection and pay of medical offices and the administration of the system.

Corrigan and Robert Harrison published two pamphlets on the subject as well as undertaking extensive research. They wanted the administration to be under the control of the Poor Law Commissioners with a board nominated by the Lord Lieutenant, a view which brought them into conflict with the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons who wanted the control of the system and finance to rest with them.

A series of letters covering this disagreement and attacking Corrigan were published in the Dublin Evening Post, although Corrigan won the press battle the government shortly afterwards withdrew the bill.

Arrangement:

Material is divided into two series, the correspondence published in the Dublin Evening Post and replies to Questionnaires sent out by Corrigan and Harrison

DC/3/4
Medical Act (1858) and proposed Amendment Acts

Sub-section
1844-1879

Extent:
15 items

Creator:
Corrigan, Sir Dominic, 1802-1880

Description:
Papers relating to the Medical Act (1858) and related medical legislation collected or created by Dominic Corrigan. The Medical Act of 1858 passed after 18 years of parliamentary debate, it regulated medical education in the United Kingdom and Ireland, and created the General Medical Council to ensure that standards were met. Corrigan was active in the campaign to ensure better standard of Medical education, and was a member of the General Medical Council for 21 years.

In the three decades following the passing of the Medical Bill a series of amendment acts were brought before parliament, again Corrigan was vocal in the expression of his opinions especially in relation to the General Medical Council which he saw as unrepresentative of the 'great mass of the profession ... which pays all its expenses'. It was not until six years after Corrigan's death that an amendment bill was finally passed, which incorporated many of his suggestions.

The papers in this section are mainly Corrigan's annotated copies of proposed medical bills, petitions and suggestions for legislation from various interested parties and two notebooks containing Corrigan's own notes on the subject.

Corrigan, Sir Dominic, 1802-1880

Cullen, Paul, 1803-1873

Spratt, John, 1796-1871

Description:

During the run up to the by-election for the Dublin City seat in 1870 Corrigan's public expression of his views on the question of education led him into conflict with members of the Catholic hierarchy. His support for non-denominational education and for sweeping reforms to the university system brought him into conflict with Cardinal Cullen and others, who threatened to withdraw the support of the clergy from his campaign. This section contains letters and memoranda of meetings with members of the catholic hierarchy on this issue.

Spratt, John, 1796-1871

Description:
Copy of Dominic Corrigan's reply to Spratt's letter (DC/4/2/1) in which he lays out his opinions on educations; that there should be a great National University for Ireland concerned only with examining, open equally to all no matter where or how educated.

On primary education he gives his view that the government 'should be equally impartial to all denominations giving equal aid to all, to those who desire to have denominational education and to those who do not'. He asks Spratt and his friends to attend the meeting tomorrow so they can discuss this subject.

DC/4/2/3 Notes on meeting with Canon Farrell

12 July 1870

Extent:
4 pages

Creator:
Corrigan, Sir Dominic, 1802-1880

Description:
Manuscript notes made by Dominic Corrigan on a meeting between him and Canon Farrell. Farrell came to inform Corrigan that as he would not sign the lay declaration on education the clergy could not support him in the election, and that the clergy would be meeting at Maynooth the following week to discuss this, after which Farrell would communicate further with Corrigan.

7 August
1870

Extent:
20 pages

Creator:
Cullen, Paul, 1803-1873
Corrigan, Sir Dominic, 1802-1880

Description:
Letter from Cardinal Cullen to Corrigan laying out his views on the education question. Cullen states that Corrigan has ignored the question of catholic intermediate schools, which need to be put on the same footing as protestant ones.

He argues that university education favours protestants through Trinity College and the Queen's Colleges and insist the only solution is a catholic run college. In relation to catholic schools he insists that nothing less than Catholic schools, teachers, books and inspectors will satisfy the Catholics of Ireland. He ends by suggesting the only way for Corrigan to regain the support of the catholics is to publish a complete retraction of his earlier support of mixed education, 'a distinct condemnation of those colleges and of the principles on which they are founded.'

DC/5/15
Board of Trade Inquiry - Loss of Steam Packet Ship

Series
1873

Extent:
13 items

Creator:
Corrigan, Sir Dominic, 1802-1880

Description:
Material relating to the Board of Trade inquiry into the loss of a Dublin Steam Packet Ship in 1873. Corrigan, probably at the instigation of his son William Corrigan a lawyer, interested himself in the question of an English Barrister's standing in an Irish Court. In an English court an Irish barrister would only be heard if he was also a member of the English Bar, and Corrigan and his son thought the same rules should apply to English barristers in Irish Courts.

This section contains Corrigan's correspondence on this issues with Chichester Parkinson-Fortescue, President of the Board of Trade, as well as letters to William Corrigan, and related notes and newspaper articles.

Arrangement:
Material is arranged chronologically
